Introduction

Students may be the focus of education and Colleges may be the providers of education, but teachers are the ones that make everything possible. Without teachers schools could not provide education, while students could not get the education they need.

That's why teachers play a very important role in today's modern learning organizations and their success in meeting the needs of the 21st Century student.

A teacher is one who progressively becomes unnecessary for the learners.

Do you agree with this definition ? What does it mean to you ? If we become unnecessary, who will do our jobs ? How will the children learn ?

A successful teacher today needs to be on the lookout for all technological advances and especially those that have an educational potential. Remember the Pokemon Go frenzy from last year? That was a great opportunity for students to learn and practice the conversion between the metric system and the Imperial system used in the US.

A teacher does in the classroom — holding a debate, watching a video or a presentation, using an educational app or another — must be diagnostically and prescriptively strategic. Each activity, no matter its degree of fun or seriousness must be introduced at the right time in the learning matrix so that students learn and remember it.

The best teacher puts the student at the center of the learning universe.

The 21st Century education can be considered equivalent to student-centered education. If the student is in the center of the learning universe — not the school, not the teacher — their academic results will improve significantly.

The best teachers have student learning at the core of their mission.

Classroom management is a very important aspect of teaching. Once you get your classroom management strategies together you will find that teaching is a pleasure and your students will excel at learning. This article is designed to give you a few tips that will help you with your classroom management strategies.

Get prepared. You must be prepared each time that you walk into your class room. Children know when their teacher has done their homework and they respect the fact that their teacher cares enough about their learning to prepare themselves to teach the lesson. Each day you should carefully plan your day by developing a daily schedule as well as a lesson plan that is closely aligned to the stipulations provided by the school district.

Make your room attractive. You should work to have an attractive room that you as well as your students can appreciate and enjoy. This type of environment sets the tone for learning so take some time to make your room attractive and conducive to learning. Display attractive bulletin boards in your room that shows such things that you and your students are doing such as your student's work, art projects, science exhibits or other noteworthy class room information.

Set classroom rules. Classroom Rules- Children need rules to follow plus you need guidelines for your kids to follow in order to teach and get the most from the day. Sit with your students in the beginning of the year or anytime to design rules to live by in your room as well as in other parts of the building.

Be enthusiastic about your lessons. When you teach a lesson teach it as if you love what you are doing and be interactive with your students and engage them to participate.

Be fair with your students. As a teacher it is necessary for you to be fair to all of your students. Make a point to always hear students out and treat each one of your pupils with dignity and respect. Don't make differences in them and give the ones that appear a bit disobedient as much respect as you give those who present themselves respectfully all of the time. They will all love and appreciate you for this attitude of being fair to all students.

Keep good student records. When children do their work then their work should be graded and recorded in your grade book. This gives you an assessment of how the children are doing as well as it shows you the areas that they need help.

I conclude my paper like this that teaching is a very important job and once you get your classroom management skills in order you will enjoy teaching more as well as have a more productive teaching career. These are just a few tips that will help you to get it together in your class room: be prepared, have an attractive classroom, design classroom rules, teach with enthusiasm, be fair and keep good student record. Follow this plan and you will be very pleased.

In today's fast-changing world educational institutions need to keep up with relevant technological advances in order to be successful in delivering graduates that can thrive in the 21st Century. Therefore, the role of the teacher in modern learning organizations needs not to be overlooked.
